

International Women's Day #metoo

The #metoo movement has sparked many interesting conversations online, in the media and among friends and colleagues about consent, equality and using the power you do have to raise up others. With International Women's Day falling in March, this is an excellent time to highlight books that will keep this discussion going.

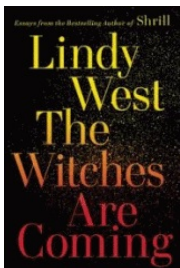

Created by CPLkj

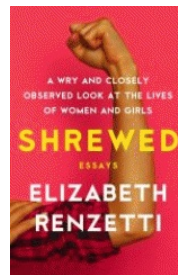

Witches Are Coming, The
[electronic resource] : West,
Lindy.
West, Lindy.

The witches are coming /
Lindy West.
West, Lindy, author.

The Witches Are Coming
[electronic resource] : West,
Lindy.
West, Lindy.

Shrewed : a wry and closely observed look at the lives of women and girls : essays /
Elizabeth Renzetti.
Renzetti, Elizabeth, author.

Shrewed by Elizabeth Renzetti. Renzetti, columnist for the Globe and Mail, raises many questions about feminism in this collection of essays. She tackles everything from why there are so few women in politics to the future of feminism and she does it all with wit and intelligence. While this book...

What does consent really mean? / written by Pete
Wallis and Thalia Wallis ; illustrated by Joseph Wilkins.
Wallis, Pete, author.

What Does Consent Really Mean by Pete Wallis and Thalia Wallis. This is a graphic novel that explains consent through conversations amongst a group of teens. The reader will explore with the characters what consent looks and feels like with examples that range from tickling to being coerced into w...

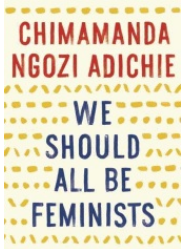

Dear Ijeawele, or A Feminist
Manifesto in Fifteen Suggestions [electronic resource] : Adichie, Chimamanda Ngozi.
Adichie, Chimamanda Ngozi.

We Should All Be Feminists and Dear Ijeawele: A Feminist Manifesto in 15 Suggestions are two small and easy to read volumes by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie. These two short books offer passionate suggestions for why our world needs to embrace feminism and equality. In each she argues that we need to c...

International Women's Day #metoo

The #metoo movement has sparked many interesting conversations online, in the media and among friends and colleagues about consent, equality and using the power you do have to raise up others. With International Women's Day falling in March, this is an excellent time to highlight books that will keep this discussion going.

Created by CPLkj

We should all be feminists / Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie.

Adichie, Chimamanda Ngozi, 1977- author.

We Should All Be Feminists and Dear Ijeawele: A Feminist Manifesto in 15 Suggestions are two small and easy to read volumes by Chimamanda Ngozi

Adichie. These two short books offer passionate suggestions for why our world needs to embrace feminism and equality. In each she argues that we need to c...

The Best Kind of People [electronic resource] : Whittall, Zoe.

Whittall, Zoe.

F-bomb : dispatches from the war on feminism / Lauren McKeon.

McKeon, Lauren, 1984- author.

F Bomb: Dispatches from the War on Feminism by Lauren McKeon. While feminism is experiencing a moment right now, those against feminism, men and women alike, are still working hard to discredit this movement. In this book, McKeon unpacks those arguments and gets inside the issues that are leading...

The best kind of people / Zoe Whittall.

Whittall, Zoe, author.

In Zoe Whittall's novel The Best Kind of People, the author places us right in the middle of sex scandal. The family and community of Avalon Hills must deal with the fallout when a popular teacher at a private high school is accused of sexual misconduct on a ski trip. This excellent book offers no...